BRIEF NOTE OF THE MONTH

On July 8th 1497, Saturday, the noble Vasco da Gama, under the command of King Manuel I, set sail from Belém to India, commanding an army of 4 ships – Saint Gabriel, Saint Rafael, Bérrio and another one transporting provisions. Abroad, there were a hundred and fifty sailors and soldiers – half of them died of scurvy during the journey.

João de Barros, a 16th century chronicler, describes the departure from the Tagus river referring the place as “praia de lágrimas” (beach of tears), where it was witnessed tearful goodbyes.

Vasco da Gama arrived at Calecute port, India, in 1498, passing by the Good Hope Cape.
